Temperatures will soar well into the 80s, with even a few lower 90s possible, this afternoon. A weak cold front will sag into the area from the northeast, and in combination with a dryline, could serve as a focus for isolated thunderstorm development during the mid-late afternoon. A storm or two could strength to severe levels, bringing with it the potential for large hail, damaging wind gusts, cloud to ground lightning and brief downpours. Overall storm coverage will be low, so most locations will remain dry.
